Cider Mill Playhouse Announces Creative Team and Casting for *You Can't Take it With You

(Endicott, NY) After its highly acclaimed and well-attended season opener of its 40th season last month, Cider Mill Playhouse is pleased to announce the cast and creative team of the next main stage production, You Can't Take it With You. The show runs November 5 through 22, with shows on Thursday through Sunday evenings at 7:30pm.

"As the professional theatre company in the greater Binghamton area that, on average, provides the highest weekly pay scale to our actors, we are thrilled to share that this particular cast is almost exclusively made up of area residents. This demonstrates our commitment to engaging local professional actors. Our shows are locally produced, and the Playhouse provides paid work to all our professionals—whether on stage or off. This structure increases our operating expenses significantly, but it also strengthens our local economy and helps artists and other theatre professionals make a living. We appreciate that our patrons know they are partnering with us to have a positive community impact when they buy a ticket to a Cider Mill Playhouse show," explains Executive Artistic Director Gail King Belokur.

As previously announced, the show is directed by area resident Tim Mollen. He is joined by scenic designer Samantha Adamason, costume designer Rhiannon Randall, lighting designer Paul Radassao, and sound designer Patrick Lachance. Each of these designers have worked previously at Cider Mill Playhouse and return to the area for this production. They are joined by a cast of sixteen, many of whom have been seen regularly in the area:
